Meantime, however, it must be admitted that the outlook has changed considerably for the worse. One factor in this change is the health of the Czar. His Imperial Majesty ALEXANDER III., who will doubtless be known in history as the Peace Preserver, as his father was known as the Liberator, though still a comparatively young man, being in his aftieth year, and possessed of great muscular strength, is now suffering from Bright's disease, and the physicians entertoin so little hope of his recovery that one of them has declared he has only some few months to live. Very little is known of the rail character of the CZAREWITCH. In face and figure he strongly resembles the the ment naval battle. Duke of York, to whom he is first cousin; heis about to marry a grand-daughter of the QUEEN, Princess ALIX of Hesse; he has close ties to the English Court, is reputed to have a penchant for England and British institutions, and has never displayed any etrong leanings to the military party in Russia. Like the Emperor WILLIAM II of Germany he may, on his accession. develop greater strongth and vigour than his previous career has indicated, and if he to guide the reins of Russian policy he will need marked determination of character. The present CZAR has kept a tight hund on those ambitious spirits who would fain. sword in hand, set about the work of extending the already wide of dundaries of the Muscovite Empire. It is quite possible, indeed it is only too probable, that efforts may be made on the inauguration of a new reign to involve Russia in fresh schemes of conquest or aggrandisement, which not all the new ruler's desire for peace could control ...
